

NATIONAL S'MORES DAY

August 10, 2025

We honor the most commonly packed camping snack by celebrating National S'mores Day on August 10. Summertime is finally here, and with it comes camping and gathering around the firepit in the great outdoors.

History of National S'mores Day

While the origins of National S'mores Day remain unknown, the s'more, the great American camping treat, has a long, delicious history. The first mention of such a treat was in the 1920s in a book of recipes published by Campfire Marshmallows, home of the original marshmallow and still in business today. At that time, the recipe was called a "Graham Cracker Sandwich" and suggested the treat had already been made popular by the Boy Scouts and Girl Scouts.

Later, in 1927, the Girl Scouts published a similar recipe in "Tramping and Trailing with the Girl Scouts"—but they called it "some more." Finally, in the late '30s to late '50s, various recipes gave the name as we know it today: s'mores.

The ingredients for the original s'mores are: one marshmallow, milk chocolate squares, and two graham crackers. The traditional method for making s'mores is by a campfire, and it's hard to beat that experience. Part of the fun is each person getting to customize their marshmallow's "toast" level. Do you set your marshmallow on the fire and blow the flame out once it is burnt? Do you allow your marshmallow to hover over the flame and toast to a less than charred yet caramelized state? Do you barely get the marshmallow tan?

Whatever your preference on marshmallow toasted-ness, the end result is the same: huge smiles and full bellies.

TIPS FOR CAMPING WITH KIDS

It's never too early to start camping with your kids. Here are some tips for getting started—and for making the experience a memorable one.

- + Practice Camping at Home: Pitch a tent in the backyard or even inside your home. Spend a half day or so at a lakeshore or park and see how your kids react to the experience.
- + Let Kids Help Pack: Give children the responsibility to pack their own camping gear (using a list you've created). Double-check your child's packing job before leaving home. Keep organized by having your kids pack personal items in a duffel bag and encouraging them to always return those items to that duffel.
- + Pack Food Kids Like: Allow your kids to help contribute to menu planning so they get excited about the trip. Ask them what they would like to eat and what treats they want. Keep ready-to-go snacks that are accessible while you're traveling and at the campsite.
- + Find the Right Campsite: Pick campgrounds with amenities that suit your family's needs. Some campgrounds have ballfields, beaches or swimming areas, streams or rivers and playgrounds; others offer picnic tables, and playgrounds.
- + Research Activities: Know what day hikes or other activities are available at your destination. Be ready with some ideas when the kids say: "I'm bored." More developed campgrounds have bulletin boards that map out easy nature trails. Can you rent a boat or ride bikes? Plan ahead for hikes.
- + Organize Your Gear: Organize camping gear in totes for easy access when you get to camp. Use clear plastic bins or cardboard boxes to keep your kitchen supplies, tent, sleeping bags and other equipment in separate compartments.
- + Dress for the Weather: Check the weather and dress your kids for those outdoor conditions. If there's a chance of rain, be prepared with rain jackets (and one or two activities for the tent!). And remember that temperatures can drop at night even if it's hot and sunny during the day. Think layers so kids can put on or take off clothing as needed to adjust to temperature changes.
- + Anticipate Possible Challenges: Try to troubleshoot potential problems ahead of time. Is your child still potty training, or do they hate getting up at night to go to the bathroom? Bring a little travel toilet that you could put just outside your tent. Does your child wake up early? Bring a book or a toy that could keep them occupied in the morning when you're still bleary eyed. Is your teen a light sleeper and a late riser? Remember earplugs so your teen can sleep in while the rest of the family is enjoying an early breakfast.

ALL ABOUT CAMPING

What Is Camping?

Camping is a recreational activity in which people temporarily live in tents, RVs or cabins. It is a popular activity throughout the world. Campers experience fresh air, wildlife and immersion in nature for a short time.

Most people travel to established campsites when camping. These sites usually have facilities that make camping more convenient. This can include outdoor electrical outlets, hot showers, restrooms with flush toilets, and even laundry equipment. National parks and forests are popular places to camp during the summer months. Indeed, camping is so popular at some of these places that the campsites are often reserved months in advance. Some campers travel great distances to camp far away from civilization.

Campers can enjoy a variety of activities when they go camping. Some choose to go canoeing or kayaking. Others hike or bike on trails surrounding the campground.

Camping Equipment

There are some items that need to be brought on every camping trip. A tent and sleeping gear are necessary. Tents come in many different sizes and shapes. Modern tents are relatively lightweight and easy to set up. Most campers prefer to sleep in sleeping bags, often on an air mattress that can be inflated at the campsite. As an alternative to tents, some people bring a trailer or RV. These options provide a comfortable place to sleep and prepare food.

Campers prepare food in different ways. Some cook over a wood fire. Others use camping stoves, fueled by gas. Fresh meat and vegetables must be kept cold, so these items are kept in a cooler with ice. It is important to keep all food stored in a proper container to keep wild animals away from the campsite.

Many children attend camps during the summer months, when school is not in session. These camps are on a permanent site and often include wooden cabins, where campers stay for extended periods. These camps allow children to participate in all kinds of outdoor experiences, such as swimming, hiking, and water sports.

Camping is also an important part of children's groups. The Boy Scouts, the Girl Scouts and many other youth organizations include camping in their activities.
